Re: Research Scientists at Google DeepMind

April 2, 2024

Dear ,

Being currently in Bosch company applying AI for car industry, I am orienting myself to combine my background in biomedical Eng and AI with some additional personal interests. In LinkedIn I found an open position Research Scientist at Google DeepMind which sounds very interesting to me.

This goal of use the power of tech in favour of people makes research very attractive to me because in today's world we are so focused/distracted with our lives that we forget about others and what is really important. I would like to be part of the AI/technology revolution by using it to positively impact patients' lives. I would like to work in a collaborative and innovative environment and with people who share the same passion as me. I believe that DeepMind aligns with my ambitions and my profile as I'll explain shortly.

As Research in Utwente, I am responsible for developing an AI solution to detect EEG patterns indicative of epilepsy. In a research group as diverse as this one, I am was the only member in the areas of AI, which implies additional responsibilities/challenges including the ability to communicate complex ideas in a simple way, strong communication skills, autonomy. In previous positions, I had the opportunity to learn from great professionals, become familiar with a wide range of topics and gain experience in various fields of AI. When working with EEG, given its complexity, I ended up having contact with techniques applied to the signal, text, images and video and the creativity to adapt and optimize them for EEG. Despite being a tech girl, I value people and human relationships a lot, so I always put myself in situations that make me come into contact with people from different social levels (as a volunteer and waiter). From this I learn to zoom out, consider perspectives different from mine, understand the lenses the world comes with and learn from them.

I believe that "everything is figureoutable" so I'm always willing to learn and work with others. I think I can be a good candidate for this position and that it will be a good opportunity to take a step forward in my career, make a difference and challenge myself daily.

I would like to introduce myself and explain my motivations in a meeting, you can contact me by (+351) 926 201 260 or email zefinhamaria99.eng@gmail.com

Yours sincerely,

Ana Maria Sousa
